What does Central Eurasian studies really need now?: Trends, Gaps, and Theoretical Engagements

Morgan Liu, Ph.D.

Associate Professor, Department of Near Eastern Languages and Cultures, Department of Comparative Studies, The Ohio State University

Friday, May 16, 2014
4:00pm
Stuart 102
5835 S Greenwood Ave.
Chicago, IL. 60637

A frank face to face conversation about the state of research on Central Eurasia, particularly on post-Soviet Central Asia. We will try to identify trends and clusters of approaches, the still tremendous gaps in coverage and perspective, and the kinds of theoretical engagements that may promise to lift Central Eurasian studies out of its obscure ghetto and make it relevant to wider communities of scholarship and practice, and to publics. This is as much a dialogue as a lecture: your interests and projects will be very relevant to our proceedings.

Event sponsored by CASS, CESC, CEERES, CIS

Reception to follow
centralasia.uchicago.edu